NEWS FROM THE COUNTRY

MORVEN.

Our big snow storms have passed by and again we see the beautiful spring sun.

The farmers are very busy drawing their pressed hay to Fredericksburgh station.

Mrs. R. Hubbs returned to her home in Picton on Wednesday.

Mr. R. H. Perry, druggist, of Fergus, and daughter Adeline are down on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Perry. Mr. F. C. McGuire is busy moving to Napanee.

I suppose B. B. feels quite old now being grandpa.

JEMMY MCSHEEHAN says:—"If ye gets a good stroke of piles don't get that Magic Pile Lotion, if ye do it'll stop thin so quick yiz'll have no time at a' to injoy the disease."

LONSDALE.

Mrs. Lawrence, Manitoba, is visiting friends in Lonsdale and vicinity. She expresses herself as being well satisfied with their western home.

Mrs. John Bremen returned from Gananoque on Tuesday.

Mr. Lazier and Mr. Hayes are on the sick list at present.

A large number of our young people spent a very pleasant time at Mr. Meagher's on Tuesday evening.

A good many valentines were received by the people of our village. As usual some were indifferent while others were a little cross about it.

—LUNG DISEASES are slow in their development and progress and no remedy exists or ever will exist that will stop and cure them at once. Salvator-Magnus will give you more satisfaction in one month than any other lung remedy can give you in a year. But it must have a fair trial to do any good at all.

WILTON.

Mr. Ira Snider has moved into the penny toll-gate.

Mr. Black, the student who preached in the Presbyterian church weeks ago last Sunday, lost a robe while driving into Kingston that evening.

J. Snook has given up farming and will move to Deseronto. C. Stover has rented his farm.

On Monday night Rev. C. O. Johnston, of Kingston, delivered a very interesting lecture on "Human Nature," to an appreciative audience in the Methodist church. After the lecture, refreshments were served and Mr. Johnston favored them with three songs.

On Saturday last as Mr. and Mrs. Owens and Miss Joyce were out driving, their horse became unmanageable. The cutter was upset, the occupants thrown out and the horse went on, and was caught after a two miles' race.

—RHEUMATISM CURED IN A DAY.—South American Rheumatic cure for Rheumatism and Neuralgia radically cures in 1 to 3 days. Its action upon the system is remarkable and mysterious. It removes at once the cause and the disease immediately disappeared. The first dose benefits. 75 cents. Warranted by Detor and Fullerton, Druggists.

ENTERPRISE.

Business rather dull.

Patrons of Industry trying to make a show.

Mr. Lono Wager has purchased the old Methodist church for the sum of $276.

The adjourned official quarterly board will meet here on Saturday. Some important business on the docket.

We trust that the young men from Moscow who last Sunday evening at church displayed their valentines during services would be more careful in future.

Rev. Wm. Joliffe, chairman of this district, will occupy the pulpit of the Methodist church on Sabbath evening next.

Our pastor, Rev. Allen, is engaged in special services at Desmond.

Mr. Robert Cox has placed a new safe in his store. It is of large dimensions and will be burglar proof sure.

Miss May Davey, Newburgh, spent last Sunday with her brother, Mr. Alf. Davey, YARKER.

A grand masquerade carnival was held here on the night of St. Valentine's day, and to say it was a grand success would not be putting it strong enough. Previous to opening it began to sprinkle rain, many thinking it would cause the cancelling of the carnival, but the many arrivals from a distance caused the villagers to turn out en masse, and the carnival was opened, though the weather did look threatening. The rink was well lit up showing off the masqueraders to perfection, and the dressing of the maskers was excellent, and would have done justice to any city carnival. As far as fun was concerned the Clowns were the life of the whole thing. There were present many from a distance, and most every village was represented. The judges were Alvin Vanliven, A. W. Benjamin, and B. S. O'Laughlin. The names handed as characters were: Maud McIlroy and Ida Lee, S. A. Lasses; Mac Luven, clown, Mac being the life of the rink; Gertie Connally, nurse; M. C. Dunn, clown; Mrs. Ewart and Atkins, twin sisters in plaid dresses; Maggie Lake, Rob Roy Lassie; F. J. Atkins, duke; Alf Connally, gentleman; Edith Dear, summer; Edie Woodcock, clown; Phil Dunn and C. Sly, Oriental brothers; Wm. Jones, of Odessa, suit of armour; Delbert Castiday, country girl; G. L. Davy, of Murvale, Japanese fisherman; Fred M. Lee, of Alliston, snow-shoer; G. W. Purday, of Murvale, clown; Clarence Ewart, five year old clown; Elsie Dear, Eva St. Clair; R. Woodhouse, sailor boy; Violet Ewart, Queen of the fairies; Jessie Winter, black diamond; Mrs. M. Vanliven, diamond dyes; Issie Woodhouse, Swiss peasant; Amelia Winters, magic queen; Velma Wartman, morning star; S. Winter, French clown; Annie Raxter, Dolly Varden; Tice Castiday, Forgaugh's clown; Minnie Jackson, Spanish Girl; Edie Baxter, Little Bo-Peep; Chas. Jones of Odessa, Indian chief; Jno. Ewart, Scotch Highlander; Mabel Montgomery, the Press; Derwood Castiday, Topsy; Zelta Wartman as Canada; Mabel Cross, summer; Mrs. F. E. Benjamin, black diamond; Mrs. Cheevers, Congregational nun; Alf. McArthur and Mrs. Garrison as colored folks. The last two gave a jig performance to the music of a harmonica, much to the amusement of the spectators, M. Vanliven and T. Castiday as clowns taking a hand in. Prizes were awarded to Phil Dunn, Mrs. Ewart and Elsie Dear for skating, and Will Jones, Derwood Castiday and Zelta Wartman on costumes. Every body enjoyed themselves and were well satisfied with the Carnival. This is the last of the season.

NAPANEE MILLS.

The radiant sunshine has revived the drooping spirits of the afflicted after so much tempestuous weather.

Among the many varieties of musical instruments for which Mr. Clement is agent, Mr. James Ferris selected a pianette. For volume and mellowness Jim's instrument cannot be excelled.

Inspector Burrows commends Mr. Howard's methods of teaching, his excellent order, and the tidy appearance of the school room. Outside, Mr. H.'s gentlemanly deportment has earned golden opinions for himself.

From most worthy sources in Colebrook, Camden East, Newburgh, Napanee and Belleville, comes the cheering verdict that the Conundrum Supper was gloriously obstolificacious, as to which, to whom and to what.

The ladies received unstinted praise for the excellencies provided, and for the elegant appearance of the tables. The attendants maids of honor looked their best, and seemed to have just emerged from fairyland, so lightly did they glide from one guest to another. To Mrs. Brown we are indebted for the idea, who, while recuperating in Brad-

Fanny Phippen, one of Conway's fairest and brightest young ladies, loved by all. She being a member of the English church the Rev. Mr. Forneri preached the funeral sermon on Sunday last, when he spoke very highly of Fanny. The friends have our sympathy in this their sad bereavement.

A loved one now is gone,
The only hope this home possessed
Has from the circle flown.

Through weary days of suffering,
She never once complained,
She lived a cheerful Christian life,
And heavenly love she gained.

Mr. John T. Hill, of Kingston Business College, was home attending the funeral of Miss Fanny Phippen this week.

Mr. Amos Younges was up last week cutting wood for Mr. Wm. Herbert. Amos is a hustler with the axe.

Mrs. Hutchison is home from attending the funeral of her grandchild in Toronto.

Mr. Fletcher, of Queen's University, Kingston, very ably filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian church on Sunday last, in the absence of Mr. McArthur. There will be no service next Sunday in the Presbyterian church, as Dr. Ross, of Queen's University, will preach in the Union Church, Ernestown.

Piles! Piles! Itching Piles!

SWARMS—Moisture: Intense itching and stinging; most at night, worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWANEE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. At druggists, or by mail for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia; Lyman, Sons & Co., Montreal, wholesale agents.

RICHMOND.

Friday's storm blocked many of the side roads.

Miss Nellie Killorin has returned from the Clare river, where she was visiting her sister, Mrs. O'Neil.

James McKittrick has secured the contract for erecting a large barn for the Doyle Bros., Ernestown Station.

Wm. Breeze has put his woollen mill, saw mill, and shingle mill in first-class order, and is prepared to do first-class work in every department.

Owing to some misunderstanding Mr. Hinck will not run the Forest Mills cheese factory. Miss Brennan has sold to the patrons for $850. Mr. G. W. Sheppard will be the cheese maker.

On Saturday last as Mr. Robt. Ballance and Mrs. Parks were returning from Napanee the horse became frightened and pitched both occupants out of the cutter breaking the shafts, and then started off at a lively pace. Fortunately Mr. Wm. Robinson captured the animal before going off.

Miss Fannie Carscallen, daughter of Mr. Medcalfe Carscallen, is very low and recovery is doubtful.

Messrs. Jas. Dudgeon and Jas. Killorin intend going to the Northwest shortly.

Robert and Hugh McCormack captured three fine bears one day last week.

THE OWEN

ELECTRIC BELT

AND APPLIANCE CO.
49 KING ST. W., TORONTO, ONT.
G. C. PATTERSON, Mgr. for Canada.

Electricity, as applied by the Owen Electric Belt.

Is now recognized as the greatest boon offered to suffering humanity. It is fast taking the place of drugs in all nervous and rheumatic troubles, and will effect cures in seemingly hopeless cases where every other known means has failed. It is nature's remedy, and by its steady, soothng current that is readily felt.

POSITIVELY CURES

Rheumatism,	Sexual Weakness,
Sciatica,	Female Complaints,
General Debility,	Immunity,
Lumbago,	Kidney Diseases,
Nervous Diseases,	Liver Complaint,
Dyspepsia,	Lame Back,
Varicocle,	Urinary Diseases.

RHEUMATISM

It is a well known fact that medical science has utterly failed to afford relief in rheumatic cases. We venture the assertion that through Electricity, we can in time, recover more cases of Rheumatism than all other means combined. Some of our leading physicians, recognizing this fact, are availably themselves of the most potent of nature's forces.

TO RESTORE MANHOOD

Thousands of people suffer from a variety of nervous diseases, such as: Sexual Weakness, Impotency, Lost Manhood, Weak Back, etc., that the old modes of treatment fail to cure. There is a loss of nerve force or power that cannot be restored by medical treatment, and any doctor who would try to accomplish this by any kind of drugs is practising a dangerous form of charlatanism. Properly treated

THESE DISEASES CAN BE CURED

Electricity, as applied by the Owen Electric Belt and Suspensory, will most assuredly do so. It is the only known power that can do this, and will supply what is lacking, namely, nerve force or power, impart tone and vigor to the organs and arouse to healthy action the whole nervous system.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

And the worthless, cheap, so-called Electric Belts advertised by some concerns are peddled through the country. They are electric in name only, worthless as a curative power, and dear at any price.

We Challenge the World to show an Electric Belt where the current is under control of the patient as completely as this.

Our Toronto Mark is the portrait of Dr. Owen embossed in gold upon every Belt and appliance manufactured by us.

ONE MAN GOVERNMENT IN NEW YORK.

From Harper's Weekly.

There is something grimly grotesque in the pretence of Tammany Hall to be a "democratic" organization. If Thomas Jefferson could rise from the grave and hear such a society call him its patron saint without being hooted down by the public as a "fraud," he would think the world had been turned into a madhouse. The boss of Tammany Hall is sitting in his office in Fourteenth street in appearance a plain and most private citizen. He possesses neither official character nor title, but he is the ruler whom persons of official character and title obey. He receives petitions and remonstrances from his fellow-citizens as if they were his subjects, and says ay or no as one of highest authority. He issues orders and instructions to the Mayor of New York and to other officers of the city government as to politics to be followed, measures to be executed, subordinates to be appointed or removed, and his will is accepted as law. Disobedience may occur, but it is punished with political banishment or death. He gives out his commands to members of the Legislature from this city as to bills to be passed or to be defeated; and members know that if they show a will of their own, they will find the will of the boss as an almost insurmountable obstacle in the way of their re-election. And whatever private citizen renders himself obnoxious to him may have to suffer all the injuries and annoyances which an arbitrary use of the municipal power may be able to inflict.

The boss may listen to the advice of his followers, but his will rules. This is one-man government. It is difficult to imagine anything more undemocratic.

the organization knows well by repeated experience just what to do with. The ready V or single $ is always forthcoming to these at about election time. The candidate who is not a government supporter may sometimes try to counteract these tactics by the distribution of some personal wealth. But the individual as pitted against the government-man has a poor show. The purse of the nation is longer and wider than that of single individuals, and it is only when the organization's money is arrested or stayed in passing from hand to hand that the private individual has much chance of success. This has happened and will do so again. To hold the Conservative forces together requires money, not only to reward the voters, but the leaders must be well paid. Toryism in Canada derives its strength from four sources, the cohesion of plunder, the terrorism of the custom house and its myrmidons, which an importer must conciliate or go under; the party cry; and the wide diversity of opinions existing among its political opponents. Very little money is contributed to the Tory campaign funds from private beneficence, or from zeal in the party's cause or conviction that its principles are correct. The recent revelations at Ottawa have shown whom the sort of people are who contribute to Tory election funds. Contractors and those who are making fortunes out of the protection given them under the National Policy are the givers, simply because if the Tory party did not triumph and rule their own large gains would be in jeopardy. How much longer the people—the "sovereign" people—will allow themselves to be purchased with their own money, it is hard to say. There are some protests in the Tory ranks against the most glaring "robberies" of the National Policy; but there is no general movement towards freedom. The promise about the "mouldering branches" means just as much as the "loyalty cry." Both are merely intended to amuse the ignorant Tory. It is like giving the child a new toy to keep it quiet and amuse it.

THE duty of the Liberals is, plainly, to keep the difference between true and false tariff reform clearly and constantly defined. Already one Conservative journal—The Richmond Guardian—referring to Mr. Cleveland's motion to repeal the duty on coal oil, Mr. Pope's to put Western corn on the free list, and Mr. Davin's with regard to binder twine, etc., says: "The Conservatives are evidently forestalling the Liberals in tariff reform." It is, perhaps, useless to remind The Guardian that the Liberals "forestalled" the Conservative with regard to these very articles at every session during the last few years, and that they were rigidly voted down by our protectionist tariff reformers.

"NO! stop! Don't go, Amandine, and I will jest no more. I will tell my master what you say."

"But adjure him that he must not let madame know I have warned him. She might never forgive me. And tell him, if he wants proofs, he shall have them. If he desires it, I shall put him in a closet where he may see all, the next time madame makes her incantations."

"An airy closet, where he will not be overcome by the fumes of the brimstone—only heliotrope."

"Ah! Then they are, doubtless, good spirits. But how is he to know when the time will arrive?"

"Drop a long thread from one of your rear windows, so that it shall fall near a window of our kitchen, where I may reach it. When I see her making ready, I will give you a signal by pulling the thread, and, if he comes down, will admit him by the rear door. She always practices her magic in the forenoon."

"He will be sure to come; I will answer for that. Any excuse which affords an opportunity for seeing Madame Girard, under any circumstances, will be good for him. And where do I come in—I, your devoted Josef?"

"If you are very good, you may remain in the kitchen with me while madame is in the closet."

"Amandine, you have the word of a Josef that I shall be good—of a lover that I will come."

Josef duly reported to his master the strange story he had been told. Of course, he surmised the talking-machine was a phonograph, with which ingenious invention he had formed a slight and distant acquaintance at the time of the Exposition; but beyond that Amandine's tale seemed mysterious and improbable to him. And Monsieur Anatole had very little more of either knowledge or opinion in the premises than his valet. But the matter was one demanding investigation. They have fully agreed upon and made all ready for compliance with the girl's directions.

On the second morning thereafter, Josef, who had long already been sitting in a rear room, with the thread tied to his thumb, called excitedly to his master:

"Monsieur? The signal! It is time!"

They hastened down-stairs and were admitted by Amandine, who held a forefinger on her lips as a pantomimic injunction of silence. While Josef seated himself obediently and very willingly in the kitchen, the girl conducted Monsieur Anatole along an obscure passage-way to a large closet, which was pretty well lighted through a small square window high up in one of its walls. She caused him to mount upon a small table placed beneath that little window and then left him alone. The scene upon which he gazed in the adjoining compartment was indeed a strange one,

Monsieur Girard, seated in an easy-chair, still in the act of comfortably adjusting herself before a small table covered and draped with black. She wore a loose wrapper of some soft, clinging white stuff, and her long, heavy hair fell unconfined upon her shoulders. On the table an ebony pedestal supported, almost at the height of her eyes, a perfect sphere of rock crystal, not less than six inches in diameter. Beyond her, on another black table, stood a phonograph. The walls of the small room were draped with dark-violet hangings, the somber line of which seemed to absorb the light diffused directly above her head from a translucent globe, doubtless containing an incandescent electric lamp. Having placed herself to her satisfaction, she fixed her gaze intently upon the crystal ball and remained silent and motionless during several minutes.

Suddenly, a small, shrill, penetrating voice broke the stillness with the words: "Well? What do you see? Tell me what you behold."

The voice was not that of Madame Girard, yet seemed to resemble hers, or, rather, to be a reminder of it. Anatole command it!"

"You command anything!" thought Anatole, in a rage. "I would kick out your insides if I could get at you!"

"Four couples enter the room and take places at the table. Anatole is among them. A girl, whom he calls Nanon, is leaning on his arm."

Anatole in his excitement, forgetting where he stood, gave a jump and knocked over a pitcher, which fell upon the floor with a great smash, that, he thought, must alarm Madame Girard, and he gave one glance at her, thinking to then leap down and run, but, to his profound surprise, she seemed to have heard nothing. Evidently, she was conscious only of the voice of the machine and what she saw and heard in the crystal ball. He listened again as she went on:

"There is much jesting and laughing and frivolity. The tone of the young woman is not debrue."

She spoke with seeming reluctance, and her utterance, becoming slower and slower, ceased altogether with that gentle characterization of the demeanor of the young women, which Anatole did not question, was well within bounds. He again ventured to hope she had run down—would not be able to report anything more. Alas! He had not taken into sufficient account the spur of that diabolical phonograph, which again compelled her by its abominable squeak of—

"Well; you have not finished. Go on! Tell me all! You must see and tell me!"

"Woe to him who invented you! Monster of impudent curiosity!" ejaculated Anatole.

"There is champagne—and more champagne," resumed Madame Girard. "One of the young women sings a song. Much of it is an argot I do not understand. The others join in a chorus of: 'Tzing, la, la; tzing, la, la!' to which they beat time with a rattle of knives and forks upon the plates and glasses. The chorus ends with 'Boum.' Anatole does not pay an excessive attention to the young woman he calls Nanon. He becomes involved in a dispute with another man, concerning a race which is to come off. He makes a wager of a thousand francs that the horse Vendore will win."

She had not stopped speaking or given any indication of doing so, when again the impatient mischief-making machine pipped out, its voice mingling with hers:

"Well, go on! See more! Tell me all!"

That was just what she was doing, continuing without regard to it:

"Anatole rises and says he is going home. Nanon does not want him to go, but he persists. He and another gentleman depart. The six persons who remain join again in the chorus: 'Tzing, la, la!' Anatole and his friend light cigars and stroll along the boulevard to his club."

"Ah, I breathe again!" exclaimed her auditor. "Thank Heaven! It wasn't so very bad that time!"

She went on describing, with the same nicety of detail, his visit to his club, but, seeming to become exhausted, gradually ceased speaking and, as the phonograph no longer spurred her, appeared to sleep.

Anatole fled to his apartments.

CHAPTER IV.

BLACK MAGIC SIMPLIFIED.

The situation presented itself to Monsieur Duprez as one of horror, almost justifying despair. What prospect, he asked himself, would any young man have for marriage if the woman he sought were able to put his life under minute inspection in that appalling fashion? He did not believe he had been any worse than others; indeed, he flattered himself that, if there had been anything exceptional in his career, it had been on the side of propriety. And yet, what must be the view Madame Girard would take of it? Was there no way of putting a stop to her views? Amandine was quite right in saying it was black magic—but black magic with modern scientific attachments. The crystal ball was old as thaumaturgy itself, and really seemed to have a good deal in it, notwithstanding the pooh-poohings of an enlightened age. But how had she been able to corrupt the young and presumably innocent those too well-directed gropings into the infinite after the petty details of my private life prior to my acquaintance with her?"

"The crystal ball must be yours," replied Doctor Perkins, good-humoredly, "is simple enough. The age in which rock-crystal was supposed to have inherent magical properties has gone by. A fixed gazing upon it by one whose cerebro-spinal system is supersensitive is apt to result in the somnambulistic state of self-induced hypnotism to which Doctor W. B. Fahnestock, in 1871, gave the name of 'statuvolism.' But the same effect would be produced if the ball were of glass or polished metal. As you are, of course, aware, the clairvoyant, in the somnambulistic state, has what we may call psychic knowledge of things remote in time and space, as well as those which are near, and even of the thoughts of such persons as are in rapport with her. Is her sight limited to such things as are already in the consciousness of some human being which she can penetrate? This is a moot question. What it is of her that sees, how it sees and why it is so independent as it seems to be of the laws governing our waking life, science has by no means conclusively settled as yet. For the present, we may as well accept the facts as known, without worrying our heads over the greatest puzzle of the age. The somnambule's attention being fixed on the crystal ball, she sees and hears in that pellicid mass the things which are purely subjective in her consciousness—only—or, at least, she imagines she does, which, for all practical purposes, amounts to the same thing. That's all there is about that."

"All right so far, doctor; I understand that. But how about that mechanical raven, with its tireless croak of 'Go on—tell—speak—let's have more of it'?"

"I think you said that once it spoke while she was speaking?"

"Yes."

"Evidently she has had the ingenious idea of making the phonograph supply the place of a hypnotizer, whose commands would compel her to put her visions into speech. Without such commands, the hypnotee is very apt to relapse into silence, absorbed in the visions presented to her psychic sight and disinclined for vocal effort. This Madame Girard has probably learned and provides against by loading a phonograph cylinder with injunctions, at such intervals of time as experience has taught her might be necessary to enforce her continued speaking."

"It did seem to be a squeaking imitation of her voice."

"Hers, no doubt. It would be sufficient for the purpose. The conscious command of her waking self, repeated to her sleeping self, would be obeyed, just as if it were uttered by another person in rapport with her."

"But—why should she take all that trouble to make herself talk?"

"The somnambule has, upon awaking, no remembrance of the visions seen in sleep. My friend, you would be justified in fearing that woman. She has too much cunning for any mere man. If you could have looked into that portion of the room below your line of sight, I am sure you would have seen a second phonograph also at work busily recording every word she uttered."

"Ah! Her reporter!"

"Precisely. She awakes, knowing nothing but that she has been asleep. But that does not trouble her. All she has to do is to reverse the apparatus and listen. The phonograph will not lie."

"It won't, eh? Well, that is just what it has got to do, or I shall be ruined. Could we not, with Amandine's aid, substitute a specially instructed cylinder?"

"I fear that scheme would not work. To command her confidence it would have to be 'loaded' by her own voice. She would detect an imposition at once."

"But there must be some way. Come! I appeal to you as an American. What is the use of being an American if you cannot find out some plan for doing anything?"

"There's something in that. I reckon I shall have to, if only for the national reputation."

He lighted a pipe and cogitated.

Anatole protested:

"If you do not, I know very well what will happen. Madame Girard will only require to peruse a few more chapters of my biography—with the prejudices

"I do not think you will come to that. I already have my plan," replied the that the plan was and how it worked will, in good time, be seen; for Anatole accepted it with enthusiasm, and the details were arranged at once.

The two friends separated, with an engagement on the part of the doctor to present himself, early the next morning, at the apartments of Monsieur Duprez and a determination by Anatole to devote himself to a programme which should, he hoped, prevent Madame Girard again getting at her oracle in the interim.

When she returned from her afternoon drive, he was waiting for her. He remained to dinner. Then he induced her to accompany him to the opera. When the curtain had fallen on the last act, he persuaded her to take a little supper with him. So he managed that her time was well occupied until as late an hour as possible; and, as far as practicable, he utilized every minute of the time in declaring to her his passionate devotion and vowing life-long fidelity. That she did not hear him without interest was evident; but when he pressed her to accept his hand as well as his heart, she was coy, banteringly reminded him they were almost strangers, coquettishly affirmed that the glibness of his love-making betrayed an appalling amount of practice in amorous protestation and, withal, evaded giving him a positive answer. But, at the last moment, she relented so far as to promise that in the afternoon of the next day she would end his suspense with either "yes" or "no."

"And I would wager my neck," said Anatole to himself, as he went up to his apartments, "that which it will be depends upon the inspiration she gets from the crystal ball to-morrow. And it shall be 'yes,' for we will work the oracle."

himself near to Madame Girard, gazing steadily upon her, and waited. Presently the little shrill voice of mechanical inquisitiveness demanded:

"Well, what do you see? Tell me!" Being, as she was under the more powerful control of a living hypnotizer, the somnambule could not have heard that sound except by his direction; but, as he willed it, she was conscious of the summons and, after a little hesitancy, replied:

"I see Anatole. He is sitting alone in his room, going over a book of accounts. He closes it with a gratified expression and says to himself: 'That does not turn out badly. Fifty thousand francs are a neat profit on the transaction. Ah! The love of that dear Madame Girard is truly a mascot to me. She makes me happier, better, richer.'"

Anatole grinned and softly rubbed his hands together in an ecstasy of enjoyment. Doctor Perkins made an imperative gesture of warning not to distract his attention. The widow went on:

"He takes off his boots, puts on his slippers and looks upon his table for something to read, sighing as he does so: 'Ah, it is lonesome away from my dear Madame Girard—my sweet Natalie! What a delicious little name! So musical! The very sound of it is a caress.'"

"What do you see now? Tell me!" questioned the instrument of clockwork authority, sharply.

She continued without seeming to hear it:

"He takes up a book, a 'Treatise on the Moral Duties,' to which he devotes his attention. He says to himself: 'That is good. Such a man, a husband, a father, I shall be when I marry Natalie.' His valet brings to him a card. The name upon it is that of 'M. Claude Berthillot.' The visitor enters and is cordially received by him. They chat about things of indifference—the weather—the new minister. Monsieur Berthillot asks Anatole if he is not going out. He replies that he is not. Monsieur Berthillot insists that he shall participate in a jolly supper with two of their friends and four girls of the opera ballet. Anatole refuses. He says: 'I have, definitely and forever, my dear Claude, abandoned such frivolities. They never were to me anything more than the distractions of idle hours, but even so much they cannot be to me any more.' 'But,' says his friend, 'how about the little Nanon, who will expect to see you?' 'You know very well, my friend,' replies Anatole, 'that my friendship for Nanon was simply Platonic.' 'True,' responds Monsieur Berthillot, 'but she is very jolly. And what are you going to do with yourself—turn monk?' 'No; something infinitely better,' answers Anatole, with enthusiasm."

"Well, continue! What else do you see?" interrupted the speaking cylinder.

"I am going to marry—at least I hope I am—the best and most charming woman in the world, whom I love with all my soul and in whom I hope to find all my future happiness. The pure affection she inspires causes me to look with disgust upon the follies of the past, in which, indeed, my heart never was engaged. I am done forever with the club, the race-course, Nanon and all the rest. You mean that you are done friveling if this charming woman accepts you? In any event, my reformation is complete. The eyes of my soul have been opened by my love. If she should plunge me in despair by her rejection, I would probably go far away—Egypt—the north pole—Chicago—somewhere—and die in solitude of a broken heart. That is all." 'And who,' inquires Monsieur Berthillot, 'if I may be permitted to ask, is the woman for whom you contemplate such sacrifices?' 'None other than Mine. Natalie Girard, the loveliest of her sex, of whose white soul I aspire to make myself worthy and whose affection would be to me the greatest earthly blessing.'"

She was silent.

Doctor Perkins looked inquiringly at Anatole, who nodded his emphatic approval of that as a good point to stop at. In vain the phonograph insisted:

"Well, you have not finished. Go on! Tell me all! You must see and tell me!"

The somnambule did not hear it.

"In ten minutes you will awake, remembering nothing," was Doctor Perkins' final mental command to the

MACHINERY HALL
ROBINSON & ALLEN

(Successors to Robinson & Allen)

At eleven o'clock the next morning, Josef reported another tug at the thread tied to his thumb after the fashion of the day before.

"Come quickly," said Doctor Perkins to Anatole, with whom he was awaiting the signal. "It is essential to the success of our experiment that we make haste. I must get control of her before she has become self-hypnotized, as otherwise my attempt might only throw her into convulsions."

They rapidly descended the stairs and were met by Amandine, who noiselessly conducted them to the closet.

Madame Girard, at the moment when they beheld her through the little window, was already seated and just about to fix upon the crystal ball the fixed gaze which would quickly transport her consciousness across the borders of the unknown. Doctor Perkins, to his great satisfaction, recognized her at once as a woman who had, upon several occasions, under a pledge that her incognito should be respected, offered herself as a subject for his experiments, and had demonstrated unusual sensitiveness. He had imagined her only motive a desire to enjoy the deep sleep of the hypnotee, but now suspected her of having had a deliberate purpose to develop such neurotic conditions as would readily induce statuism. Whatever might have been the object in view, one result was certain; that rapport had been permanently established between her and her hypnotizer which would ever after give him easy and certain control. It was, therefore, with perfect confidence of success that he extended toward her his hands, formulating in his mind, with a concentrated effort of will, the command: "Sleep! I will it." The palms of his hands were downward; the fingers extended, their points converging but not touching each other; his attitude, that of authority; his countenance, expressive of firmness and profound calm. In a few seconds, without a struggle or even a glance at the crystal, Madame Girard sank back in her easy-chair in a deep sleep.

"She is one of the best subjects I ever encountered," remarked the doctor, in his natural tone of voice.

"S-h! By Heaven's sake! You will wake her up. Don't you see the window is open?" whispered Anatole, anxiously.

"Oh! There's no danger of her awaking until I tell her to do so. I have captured the control. Come, now; let us go around to her."

Amandine then conducted them to the door of the apartment hitherto sacred to "madame's magic." They opened it, raised a portiere and entered. Anatole still walked upon tip-toe, not altogether assured of the continuance of that sleep which seemed to him too sudden to be reliable; but Doctor Perkins moved with as much freedom as if in his lecture-room and, after a glance to see that no machinery had yet been set in motion, spoke as loudly as in ordinary conversation.

"Admirable," he said, chucklingly. "How well she has arranged her surroundings of light and color! I wonder if she evolved them herself or has had instruction. And there, you see, as I told you, the second phonograph, ready to do its part. She has not started it yet and you will see, if you examine, the cylinder is quite clean of impressions. With what pretty stories it might be filled if we were not to interfere."

"You make my blood run cold by the suggestion."

"It is only a fancy; we are here to prevent its becomin' a reality. Now comes the difficult part of my work. When that cylinder commences revolving, we must be absolutely silent, for the slightest noise will infibly be transferred to it, and it will now do to have it squeak at her, when she wakes, anything else than her own voice and the admonitory chirping of the other instrument. Hence, all my efforts must be by mental suggestion. I should hesitate at attempting such an extraordinary telegraphic feat, if I were not sured of the perfect rapport between us. But, under the existing condition, it will be a charming and, I am sure, successful experiment. And now to business!"

He started both phonographs, placed

HOME RULE BILL.

A Masterly Speech By Gladstone.

IRELAND'S RIGHTS DECLAIMED.

To Be Represented In Imperial Councils.

The Key Note of the Bill Is That Irish
Members Will Have Seats In the British Parliament-The Idea Is To Make the Unity of Great Britain As Strong As Possible-Gladstone's Special
Plea For the Passage of the Bill Is That the Heritage of Discord May Cease As Soon As Possible and Forever.

LONDON, Feb. 14.—Mr. Gladstone is in admirable form and looking forward with pleasure to the exertion of the day. He slept well during the night and began work at 9.30 a.m. yesterday, assisted by his secretaries. From early morning the scene in the Palace Yard, Westminster, was of the most animated description, groups of people assembling to watch the arrival of members. At 9 o'clock a number of representatives of the Irish cause were at the door of the House, and by 10.60 members were waiting for admission. When noon arrived the inner lobby was packed with members and the approaches were crowded, and when the doors opened there was a disorderly rush for seats, the members shouting and struggling like a mob of excursionists, several being thrown to the floor in the excitement. The veteran Caleb Wright, Liberal M.P. for Southwest Lancashire, who is 82 years of age, fell in the doorway and was trampled upon, but John Burns, M.P. for Battersea, rescued him. Meantime the struggle for entrance grew more exciting, and cries could be heard of "Keep back!" "Don't kick!" and other exclamations of a more emphatic character. Mr. Gladstone entered the House at 3.30 o'clock. Every Liberal and Irish Nationalist in the House stood up. When Mr. Gladstone within reasonable distance of it. If there is anything in the great principle of self-government, which, if it be a reality, never can work except through the machinery and by the laws of representation, at any rate the voice of the Irish people, the persistency of the Irish people in delivering that voice and the peaceful constitutional circumstances under which it has been delivered—[Ministerial cheers and Opposition laughter]—constitute a great fact in history.

"It is said, and I admit with truth, that Ireland is not a united country. I don't deny that the division which exists is a fact of great moment. In truth, were Ireland united, anything that can render Ireland formidable would become much more formidable. Were Ireland united all opposition would vanish as a shadow. [Hear, hear.] Ireland is not united in the sense that in one portion of the country not a mere majority of the higher classes but a considerable popular feeling is opposed to the present national movement. I will not attempt to measure this numerical strength of the minority. It is said by the party opposite that the minority in the North of Ireland is arrayed in unalterable opposition to Home Rule. Unhappy at the successful instigation of those whose plot it was to divide the people of Ireland when they were united at the close of the last century through the medium mainly of Orange lodges and through religious animosity, there was an alteration of feeling, but the Protestants of Ireland, during the period of the independent Irish Parliament, were themselves not only willing, but zealous, enthusiastic supporters of Irish nationality. Inasmuch as their political life was at that period more highly developed they led on the Roman Catholic population in the political movement which distinguished that period. [Cheers.]

"This is written broadcast upon the history of the time. Genuine national sentiment in the sense of national unity had at one time prevailed among North of Ireland Protestants. We who have seen them alter, not through their own fault, are not ready to be persuaded that they will not alter back again to the sentiment of their own ancestors—[cheers]—and with their own blood and their own people form one, in noble, glorious unity."

Alluding to English feeling toward Irish Home Rule Mr. Gladstone said he would refrain from urging that England would find herself exhausted, her work made impracticable by resistance to Irish demands. He could well conceive England main-newly exercised, and then probably there will be a great deal to do. We therefore leave the number at 103 and we fix the term at five years. We leave the constituency as it is now.

Next, as to the legislative council, Mr. Gladstone said he did not think they would have been warranted without some strong necessity in establishing the system of a single chamber; but in Ireland, he added, far from finding any such necessity, we look to the Legislative Council as enabling us to meet the expectation that we shall give to the minority some means of free and fuller consideration of its views.

The next thing is shall the Legislative Council be nominated or elected? We came to the conclusion that a nominated council would be a weak council. [Ministerial cheers.] If it should be made weak the council would probably enjoy a very short term of existence. We, therefore, propose an elective council, believing it to be the only form wherein we can give any great force to the vitality of the institution.

Well, then, how do we differentiate this council from that popular assembly? We propose to fix the number at 48, with an eight years' term of office, the term of the popular assembly being less. We then constitute a new constituency. The council constituency must in the first place be associated with a rateable value of £20, whereby to secure an aggregate constituency approaching 170,000 persons, including owners as well as occupiers, but subject to a provision that no owner or occupier has a vote in more than one constituency. Then there is no provision in the bill making the legislative council alterable by Irish acts.

Regarding the legislative assembly, these 103 members must be elected for Irish legislative business by constituencies in Ireland.

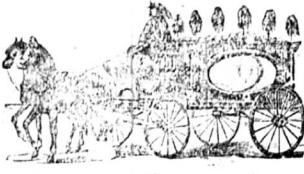

We make these provisions in regard to the assembly alterable in respect to electors and constituencies after six years, but in altering constituencies the power of the assembly will be limited by the declaratory act to the effect that due regard must be had to distribution of population.

The bill must include a provision for meeting what is called a deadlock. In a case where a bill has been adopted by the Assembly more than once and where there is an interval of two years between the two adoptions or a dissolution of Parliament, then upon its second adoption the two Assemblies may be required to meet and

Mr. Gladstone spoke as follows in a clear, strong and resonant voice: "I may without impropriety remind the House that the voices which usually pleaded the cause of Irish self-government in Irish affairs have within these walls during the last seven years been almost entirely mute. I return therefore to the period of 1886 when the position of this kind was submitted on the part of the Government of the day, and I beg to remind the House of the position then taken up by all the promoters of these measures. We said that we had arrived at a point in our transactions with Ireland where the two roads parted. You have, we said, to choose one or the other. One is the way of Irish autonomy according to the conceptions I have just referred to; the other is the way of coercion. That is our contention. It will be the recollection of the House how that contention was most stoutly and largely denied. It was said over and over again by many members opposite, 'We are not coercionists; we do not adopt that alternative, and neither can we adopt it.' [Ministerial cheers.]

"That assertion of theirs was undoubtedly sustained by the proposals, especially from the dissentient Liberals, of various plans dealing with Irish affairs. Those plans, though they fell entirely short in principle and in scope of Irish self-government, yet were of no trivial or mean importance. They went far beyond what had heretofore been usually proposed in the way of local self-government for Ireland. Well, what has been the result of the dilemma as it was then put forward on this side of the House and repelled by the other? Has our contention that the choice lay between autonomy and coercion been justified or not? [Liberal cheers.]

"What has become of each and all of these important schemes for giving Ireland self-government in provinces, and giving her even a central establishment in Dublin with limited powers? All vanished into thin air, but the reality remains. The roads were still there—autonomy or coercion. The choice lay between them, and the choice made was to repel autonomy and embrace coercion.

"You cannot always follow coercion in an absolutely uniform method. In 1888 for the first time coercion was imposed on Ireland in the shape of a permanent law added to the statute book. This state of things constituted an offence against the harmony and traditions of self-government. It was a distinct and violent breach of the promise on the faith of which union was obtained. That permanent system of repression inflicted upon the country a state of things which could not continue to exist. It was impossible to bring the inhabitants of the country under coercion into sympathy with the coercive power."

Mr. Gladstone proceeded to debate at length upon the circumstances under which the Act of Union was passed, the promise of equality in the laws and of commercial equality under which union was effected. It was then prophesied confidentially, he said, that Irishmen would take their places in the Cabinet of the United Kingdom, but it had been his honored destiny to sit in Cabinets with no less than 60 to 70 statesmen of whom only one—the Duke of Wellington—was an Irishman, while Castlereagh was the only other Irishman who had sat in the Cabinet since the union. Pitt promised equal laws when the union was formed, but the broken promises made to Ireland were unhelpfully written in indelible characters in the history of the country.

"Coming to 1832, when the resurrection of the people began and thence down to 1880, Ireland could present here only a small minority in favor of restoring to her something in the nature of constitutional rights and practical self-government. It is to me astonishing that so little weight is attached by many to the fact that before 1886, before 1885 in fact, Irish wishes for self-government were represented only by a small minority. Since 1885, when the wide extension of the franchise was protected by secret ballot, Ireland's position has been improved in Parliament. In 1886 there were 85 Nationalists, or more than five-eighths. [Cheers.] They have been reduced from 85 to 80 under circumstances somewhat peculiar—[hear, hear]—and I must frankly own, to myself among others, for reasons totally and absolutely unintelligible. [Loud cheers.]

"Let us look at the state of the case as it now stands. There are but 80 out of 101, that is to say, the wishes of Ireland for Irish self-government in Irish matters are represented only by four-fifths. [Laughter.] Honorable gentlemen seem to have no respect for such a majority as that. Do they recollect, sir, that never in England has there been such a majority? [Cheers.] No Parliament of the last 50 years has come

It now had declined to 71. In the face of such a fact who would guarantee the permanency of the opposition of the remainder? [Cheers.] He would now ask the patient indulgence of the House while giving an account of the bill. [Cheers.] He could not undertake to supply a mere table of contents. The bill, if he did, would probably bewilder his hearers, he would rather seek to present the salient points, hoping to leave a living impression on the minds and memories of his hearers; he begged them to wait and consult the bill itself, which he hoped would soon be in their hands. It would be remembered that the bill of 1886 laid down five propositions as cardinal principles to which he had endeavored to closely adhere. Change there was, but not a trenchant change from the principles of 1886. The object of the bill remained, as in 1886, to establish a legislative body in Dublin for the conduct of both legislation and administration in Irish as distinct from Imperial affairs. [Cheers.] The limiting conditions which were then observed and have since, so far as we were able to do so, been sedulously and closely served were these: We were to do nothing inconsistent with Imperial unity. Of this I will say, whatever our opponents may say, that so far as our convictions and intentions are concerned, they would be but feebly stated by being couched in the declaration that we do not mean to impair it. We wish to strengthen it. [Cheers.] We wish to give it greater intensity than it has ever yet possessed.

First, then, Imperial unity is observed and the equality of all is observed. Secondly, The equity of all the kingdoms would be borne in mind; and thirdly, there would be equitable reparation of Imperial charges.

Fourthly, Any and every practicable provision for the protection of minorities would be included. The plan proposed ought to be such as to present the necessary characteristics of a real and contented settlement. In the first place we have made it a desire to meet what we thought was no unreasonable demand for express mention of the supremacy of the Imperial Parliament. There were two methods in which that might be done: it might be done by clauses; it might be done in the preamble. We have chosen the preamble as the worthier and better, for if it were done by clause it would be too much in the character of a mere enactment. It is not necessary to say many words for such a purpose.

Our words are, "Whereas it is expedient without impairing or restricting the supreme authority of Parliament." And then the preamble goes on to declare the creation of an Irish legislature. With reference to the charge, frequently with good faith made against us, that we are destroying the Act of Union, I wish to challenge enquiry upon this fundamental point. What is the essence of the Act of Union? [Hear, hear.] That essence is to be appreciated by comparing the condition of things found in the country before 1800 with the condition of things now subsisting in England. Before 1800 we had two sovereignties in the country. One of these was collectively lodged in the King, the Houses of Lords and Commons of Ireland.

There was no more right in a true historical and legal sense in the sovereignty residing in Great Britain to interfere with the sovereignty of Ireland than there was in the sovereignty of Ireland to interfere with the sovereignty of England. This bill respects and maintains these rights of sovereignty equally throughout the entire range of the three kingdoms.

Then, coming to exclusive powers, we retain the Viceroyalty of Ireland, but we divest it of the party character heretofore borne by making the appointment run six years, subject to the revoking power of the Crown. Then also the post is freed from all religious disability. [Cheers.]

Then comes a clause which may be considered formal, although it is of great importance, providing for the full devolution of executive power from the sovereign upon the Viceroy.

Then comes an important provision for the appointment of an Executive Committee of the Privy Council of Ireland. We propose to make this an Executive Council for the ordinary affairs of Cabinet of Viceroy. The question arises, shall there be any Legislative Council? All decided that there ought to be such a council. It has appeared to us to be highly inconvenient to alter the numbers of the Legislative Assembly.

If we were to increase the number we do not know what the increase ought to be. If we were to reduce it we run serious risks of causing practical inconvenience in Dublin, especially at the time when the functions of internal government come to be and Lords. The Privy Council may try the question of the invalidity of any Irish act—that is, try it judicially and with reasonable judgment under the initiative of the Viceroy or Secretary of State.

This judicial committee is now recognized by us as the only approach we can make to the Supreme Court of the United States. In composing this judicial committee due regard must be had to the different elements of nationality. [Cheers.] We have not apprehended any difficulty there.

Other clauses provide for the security of the emoluments of existing judges and officers generally. Then there is a clause intended to correspond with the colonial validity law, the effect of which is that if the Irish Legislature should pass any act in any way contrary to acts of the Imperial Parliament, such law shall be good except in so far as it is contrary to the Imperial enactment. Two exchequer judges shall be appointed under the authority of the crown, mainly for financial business. Besides the exchequer judges, it is provided that for six years all judges shall be appointed as now.

We do not reserve for the Imperial Parliament the power to fix emoluments. These will be fixed in Ireland and the effect will be to establish a joint control of these appointments.

The month of September is probably the most convenient month for the assembly to meet. Therefore, a clause provides that it shall meet on the first Tuesday in September. [Prolonged Irish cheers.]

Certain clauses secure the initiative in regard to money bills to the assembly.

We are now coming to the important question of constabulary. We propose a gradual reduction and the ultimate dissolution or disappearance of that force, with the discharge of every obligation towards them in such a way as will not adversely affect the interests of that honorable force. During the period of transition they are to be under the control of the Viceroy. It is contemplated they will be replaced by a force owing existence to Irish authorities in local areas.

On the important subject of the retention of Irish members in the Imperial Parliament I do not regard and never have regarded it as touching what are sometimes called the fine principles of the bill. It is not included in any one of them, but whether it be a principle or whether it be not, there is no question that it is a very weighty and organic detail which cuts rather deep in some respects into the composition of the bill. There are strong arguments which may be urged in defense of the retention of Irish members in Parliament, but there is one argument I must put aside as a most dangerous argument and in itself untenable—the argument of those who say unless you retain the Irish members there is no parliamentary supremacy over Ireland. I entirely decline to admit that argument. I say that if you do admit at a stroke you shatter parliamentary supremacy in this country. Although I do not at all admit that parliamentary supremacy depends upon the retention of Irish members, I yet quite admit that the retention of Irish members has great practical importance, because it visibly exhibits that supremacy in a manner intelligible to the people.

Retention involves two points, first, as to number, and secondly, as to voting power.

Now, as to the first question, that of numbers. Is Ireland to be fully represented in the House? [Hear, hear.] Well, probably the feeling will be in favor of the affirmative. Then arises another difficulty, What is full representation for Ireland?

In 1884 the House treated Ireland in a wise and liberal spirit by assigning 103 members to that country. That number was then beyond what, according to the calculations of population in this country, Ireland was entitled to, and it is claimed that, unapplied, the disparity has since been aggravated by a double process. The population of Great Britain has increased, while that of Ireland has diminished and has now reached a point that, whereas formerly entitled to 103 members, it would, according to this same ratio, now have 80.

There ought to be a general determination to interpret full representation as meaning representation according to existing population. Speaking of full representation then, I implore that the representation in the House from Ireland would be composed of 80 Irish gentlemen. Of course it follows that there would have to be an election.

These 80 members from Ireland in the House would probably be indisposed to recognize a commission given to 103 members, so when it had been determined that 80 was the proper number, we endeavored to arrange the schedule of the bill in such a manner that this Imperial representation would practically not clash with representation in the legislature at Dublin.

Now comes the greater difficulty, what voting power are these 80 members to have? Ireland is to be represented here fully.

That is my first postulate. My second postulate is that Ireland is to be invested with separate powers, subject, no doubt, to Imperial authority. Yet, still, as we must from experience practically separate a certain independent power, as has been done in other legislatures of the empire, Ireland is to be endowed with separate powers over Irish affairs. Then, the question before us is: Is she, or is she not, to vote so strongly upon matters purely British? I propose this question in the true parliamentary form: Aye, or No. There are reasons both ways.

We cannot cut them off in a manner perfectly clean and clear from these questions. We cannot find an absolutely accurate line of cleavage between questions that are Imperial questions and those that are Irish questions. [Cheers.]

Unless the Irish members are allowed to vote on all British questions they must have too little or too much, because there are questions which defy our efforts to arrange them with accuracy and precision on the proper side of the line as either English or Irish. We do not see the possibility of excluding them from one of the highest and most important functions of the House, viz.: that of determining the composition of the executive power.

A vote of confidence is a simple declaration, but may be otherwise. I do not see how it is possible to exclude Irish members from voting on that great subject.

Next, unless Irish members vote on all questions you break the Parliamentary tradition. The presence of 80 members with only limited powers of voting is a serious breach of that tradition, which, whether you resolve to face it or not, ought to be made the subject of most careful consideration.

Now come the reasons against the universal voting power. It is difficult to say:

"Everything on that side Irish; everything on this side Imperial." That, I think, you cannot do. If you ask me for a proportion, I say nine-tenths, nineteen-twentieths, perhaps nineteen-one-hundredths, of the business of the Parliament can without difficulty be classed as Irish or Imperial. It would, however, be a great anomaly if these 80 Irish members should come here continually to intervene in questions purely and absolutely British. If some large question conveniences shocks from changes introduced in English budgets. Imperial reasons also would perhaps make it necessary for us to do what we are, I think, very unwilling to do, viz., to give to Imperial officers a meddling and intervening power in relation to Irish affairs. [Hear, hear!]

The third plan is to appropriate a particular fund. Say this fund shall be taken by us and shall stand in acquittal of obligations of Ireland for Imperial service. This fund will sweep away all the difficulties of calculation and intervention which might belong to the quota method.

Then we have the fund practically in our hands, the management of the customs revenue of Ireland, which must be British. Consequently we shall be receivers of a fund which will never go near the Irish exchequer. If it be deemed a fair and convenient arrangement there can be no question of handing it backwards and forwards. We should keep it and give Ireland a receipt in full instead of coming upon her for heavy payments from year to year.

Then, next, the Customs Fund would be very nearly the right amount. I do not know what the House might consider the right amount. Judgments might fluctuate. Some might say four per cent., some five per cent., some a little more than five per cent. But the amount is this, £2,430,000 yearly gross. Sixty thousand pounds allowed for collection leaves £2,370,000 net. With the Imperial expenditure at £59,000,000 £2,370,000 is a sum that drops between a charge of four per cent. and a charge of five per cent.

The Irish members will observe that by that means everything of a practical nature we will hand over to them. Though the rates of excise and the post and telegraph rates will be a fixed amount, the authority and the whole control over them will be absolutely in the hands of Irish officers. The fund plan falls short of the exactitude of the quota plan. The latter method meets every exigency of peace and war; but this plan is not quite so exact.

Questions may arise such as: Are we assured we shall obtain from Ireland a fair share of assistance in a great Imperial emergency? I myself am bound to say that I think there is very little to fear from trusting the patriotism and liberality of the Irish Legislature. [Opposition cries of "Oh, oh," and cheers from the Government benches.]

Stinginess was never a vice of the Irish people, and if we look forward very much

107, and the members of those parties
108 that they could bring over 80 men
109 in Ireland to support their views,
110 and a case like that would open a
111 possible way to a dangerous political intrigue. [Hear, hear.]

112 My colleagues found themselves not well
113 able to face a contingency of that kind.
114 They inserted in the bill limitations on the 115 voting power of the Irish members to exclude them: (1) from voting on a bill or motion
116 expressly confined to Great Britain; second,
117 from voting on a tax not levied upon Ireland; third, from voting on a vote or appropriation of money otherwise than for the Imperial service; fourth, from voting on any motion or resolution exclusively affecting Great Britain.

118 The whole subject is full of thorns and brambles, but our object is the autonomy and self-government of Ireland in all matters purely Irish. The Irish people certainly did not raise the difficulty to which I have just alluded—the retention of Irish members in the House. This is a secondary matter in their eyes and ought not to interfere with the principal aim. In face of feeling that a shade of uncertainty still hangs over the question of retention of the Irish members, we have affixed to the paragraph concerning this question the words: "Excepting and until Parliament shall determine the coming financial legislation." I wish to supply the keynote to the financial part of the legislation. That keynote is to be found in the provision included in our plans from the first, and wisely and generously acceded to by Ireland through her representatives, that there is to be but one system of legislation for all the kingdoms, as far as external things are concerned, that will be found to entail very important consequences.

119 It has guided us to the conclusion at which we have arrived, of unity of the commercial legislation for the three kingdoms. This includes customs and excise duties, postoffice and telegraphs. By adopting this keynote we can attain to the most valuable results and will be likely to avoid the clashing friction of agents of the Imperial and agents of the Irish Governments. We can make under cover of this proposal a larger and more liberal transfer to Ireland in the management of her own affairs than we could make if we proceeded on any other principle. We hope to escape in this way all collection in the interior of Ireland of any revenue whatever by Imperial authority. The principle to which we are bound to give effect in Ireland is, Ireland has to bear a fair share of the Imperial expenditure. [Hear, hear.]

120 The word "imperial" is defined in the schedule which gives the list of Imperial burdens. There are three modes in which this fair share may be apportioned. The first method is the lump sum payment adopted in 1886. This method, we thought, should disappear naturally from the new bill, for through the retention of Irish representation here Irish members will vote the Imperial expenditures. Consequently, it would seem strange under these circumstances to revert to the method of a lump sum.

121 Another method is what may simply be described as the method of a quota—that is to say that Ireland shall pay six per cent. or five per cent. or 4 per cent. on what you please of the Imperial expenditure, which shall be taken out of the common fund. She will be debited to that extent, and will have to pay it over from her own account to ours. If you fix the quota, and the quota is absolutely elastic, should the Imperial expenditures swell, the principle of the quota would still secure the relative share to be contributed by Ireland.

122 But there is a third method, which one we adopt, that of deducting from the Irish revenues the amount due England. There is one of these revenues to which the greatest difficulty adheres. When explaining the subject in 1886 I pointed out that there was a large revenue locally received in Ireland, but really belonging to Great Britain. The principal of that revenue was within the excise department. With the advantage of the consideration which the inland revenue department has had since the former plan was produced, we get rid of the difficulty altogether as far as the inland revenue is concerned. We provide that revenue levied in Ireland shall be revenue really belonging to Ireland, that is revenue from goods consumed in Ireland. It is not so with the Customs. With the Customs there is a large debt from Ireland to this country. It is not so large as is involved in the case of excise, but still it comes up to several hundred thousands. If we adopted the method of a quota we should expose Irish finance to large and in-have to look to three sources: Customs, excise and income tax. With regard to customs we propose to leave them to our hands so that there can be no difficulty in adopting contributions so far as customs are concerned. With regard to excise we have purposes to retain considerable control in our hands.

123 That considerable power will enable Great Britain to make sure of having aid from Ireland if she thinks such provision necessary. The Irish balance sheet stands thus: On the credit side would appear excise, £2,220,000; taxation, which goes over stamps, income tax, excise license, which are £1,495,000; postal revenue, £740,000; Crown lands, £65,000; miscellaneous, £140,000, making a total of £5,660,000. On the other side, Ireland takes over the whole of the civil charges with the exception of the constabulary charges of £3,110,000, inland revenues £160,000, and postal service £790,000.

124 We propose that Ireland shall take part of the constabulary charges amounting to £1,000,000. This would bring the Irish charges to £5,160,000. We propose that she shall receive against that the items I have put to her credit amounting to £5,660,000. Thus she will have a clear surplus of £500,000 with which to start on her mission.

125 I would ask you to contrast the present condition of the Irish people with what it was at the time of Swift when the Irish ascendancy Parliament begged to be admitted to the British Parliament and was refused, or with what it was at the beginning of the century immediately after the union when Irish voters were trooped to the polls for the simple purpose of recording their votes in order to return landlords to Parliament.

126 We have concluded that we have before us now a different state of things. Ireland has on her side the memory of vast victories earned by the sweat of labor, but really earned and recorded on her behalf. Ireland has mighty sympathies. She requires this larger and stronger island. She has obtained the suffrage of Scotland and the suffrage of Wales, and in the short space of seven years she has changed a majority of more than 200 against her in England to one-third that number.

127 She was stinted in franchise and means of representation. Now she possesses a most extended franchise with most perfect protection. Her remaining objects she has not yet attained to, but she looks forward to the attainment of them with more means in her hands.

128 One other source of strength she has—the moderation of her demands. [Hear, hear.] She has ever since 1886, if not before, but unequivocally and nationally since abandoned the whole argument that perhaps she was entitled to make on the subject of the Act of Union. She has asked you to save for yourselves every Imperial power. She has consented to accept the House of Commons and the universal supremacy of the Empire. In return she has asked you only that she have the management of her own affairs, which reason and justice, combined with the voice of her people, I hope, will soon move this nation to say soon shall be awarded her.

129 If this is to be the end of the matter I think dispassionate men would say, the sooner ended the better; the sooner we stamp the seal which will efface all former animosities and open the era of peace and good will, the sooner done the better.

130 But these are matters which human vision is hardly equal to penetrating. I must say, however, for my own part, that I never will and never can be party to bequeathing to my country the continuance of this heritage of discord which has been handed down from generation to generation with hardly momentary interruption through seven centuries—this heritage of discord with all the evils that follow in its train.

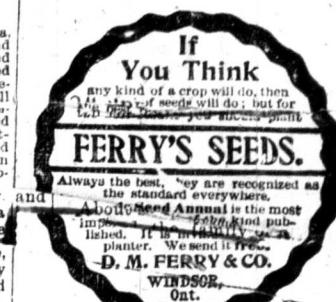

131 I wish no part nor lot in that process. It would be misery for me if I had foregone or omitted in these closing years of my life any measure it was possible for me to take towards upholding and promoting the cause, which I believe to be the cause not of one party or one nation, but of all parties and all nations. To these nations viewing them as I do with their vast opportunities under a living union for power and happiness to these nations, I say: Let me entreat you. If it were my last breath I would so entreat you. Let the dead bury their dead and cast behind you former recollections of bygone evils; cherish, love and sustain one another through all the vicissitudes of human affairs in times that are to come. [Prolonged Liberal cheers.]

OBITUARY.

CATHERINE LOUCKS.

Mrs. Catherine Loucks, widow of Abram Loucks, died in North Fredericksburg on Sunday, February 12th. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon to the Napanee cemetery, the funeral services being held in the house by Rev. J. J. Rae. Mrs. Loucks was born in Camden township

Early in life she became a member of the Presbyterian church to which all her family belong, and continued through her whole life an active worker in the cause of Christ. Her life was indeed most pure and blameless and affords a bright example of Christian virtue. Always charitable, kind and considerate for others, her counsel was constantly sought in church mat-
